I. The spring had brought its storus and floods hlie letters frequent came from bome

And life now spent in calm repose, Was slowly yielding to finatics mark.

And by his neighbors rarely now On his necessioned walks was seen. And yet, so slowly came the change 'ntil at last, he told us now To walls of home he was coulined;

We then were in a dishunthome, And quickly anost return hefore That last, and parting—he but lived To see these whom he leved once more. But still some klud personalou sald

And all his life was growing him

To coming gloom a steadfast face, As if o t wills could charm away Or stay awhile I wath's measured pace. And then a friend wrote us ngain I saw your Father at the door, Vatching the sunny afternoon, And hrighter than long time before all hopefully the letter ran, He might return to health again; omehow it read as only meant.

For comfort where the hope was vair. The picture that it made-to me. A strange presentiment did seem; I saw him sitting far away, In the strange door of misty dream

Were shora of all the ripened grain; When Will and I reached home again The house was silent, closed and dark, The shutters like closed syellds spake of trembling about that watchers feared A strange and chilly atmosphere, With gloom, pervaded all the place, And looks that dare not speak thoir the

Were pictured on each silent face. Moving like shndows round the hall, The footsteps clung nato the floor, The stillings querched each wonled withd And muffled echoes closed each door. In wistful caim awaiting still, Like those who sit in gloomy fear, Marking each passing count of time As some impending fate drawa near.

But then came on some brighter days. When death had given a short reprieve, Like the stray beams that often flow From subset on a cloudy eve. And I remember now the day He bade us have his old arm-chair et out upon the grassy yard-Oace more he'd breathe the morn's fresh air. He gaze, abbee the stassy down, To where the morning sunlight geeling Above the roofs and spires of town.

He told us sadly that he fell Hebl cross that shreshold severmore And Will and I walked down that day Along the river lerrace road, Beyond the old nill breasting out Upon the water's falling flood. We kneeled and drank out of the sbring That bubbled down the steep bill shore and then sal near the water's edge.

Beneath a glant sycamore. How often I have seen film there In the hright calm of summer days, Watching the mountain's purple line Far o'er the water's gilttering maze.

There, far above, on upland slopes. The oak and hazel forests stood, Where oft, in autumn afternoon, We all went nutting in the wood. And always on Thanksgiving eve. When happy feast had passed at home, it was his wont to go with me, And through the russet woodlands roam

And, as we gathered nuls, he told Of all these lands in former days Or all these lands in former days;
And all the while secmed looking back
On pictures through the autuma haze he rustic stories of the lives
Of those who filled these homes before he quaint old men that older seem Than they who live in ancient lore

And fireside histories that hava More human sympathy instilled han tales of pomp and pageantry Or stately page with hattle filled

The many past experiences
An earnest life to him had brought,
With tessons from its changing turns
To impress on my youth he songlit. He told how wrong though suffered long, When all revenge, perhaps, had passed By some sure Providence received A sadder punishment at last.

Next day we rambled, Will and I, 1'nto the furthest Western field, And there the husy men and team Were threshing out the harvest yield The men were merry at their work. Yet each one, when he turned Looked sadder as he came to us

To ask how Father was to-ds over the rustling, stubble field, Down to a broken ledge we strayed, Where the loug grass, on hilly slope, Grew up hencath a walnut shade. saw my old grandfather once, 'nder that shade, oue afternoon, He sat amongst the harvest men XII. And there w gathered russet sheaver

From out t eshocks that stood around And, where the shade lay close, we mad A couch upon the grassy ground. Softer than springy conches light,
Than downy pillows, were the sheaves,
As there we iny, that summer dny,
And looked up through the rustling leaves. ltraped on the air his piping shrill; low soft, now high, upon the wind, Floated the grinding of the mill. X 111.

And gathered up the shocks along, fulle those who drove the teams still sung Some old refrain of harvest song. Like incense with the vesper hymn, The russet odor of the grain ame mingled with the mellow sounda. That floated o'er the stubble plain. And there, 'mid all the soothing calm, While still the summer noon rode his Wearied with wakings of last night, We saak in sleep, both Will and I.

XIV.
That eve—the first cool antumn breath
Spread o'er a leaden cloud and chill,
And the old poplars round our home
Stood in the twilight dark and still. Ah! I remember now too well
The grievings of that last and night,
When hy his bedside waking still I watched him as a flickering light. A heavy sleep till near the morn, Then with a brightening start he woke: Yet half is dreams of other world. And all formetful, thus he spoke:

XV.

"My son, go have them bring my boat
Down from the lock where last it lay,
And place it at the nemrest whorf—
I must go o'er the atream to-day.

"All yesternoon I was down there, Past the old mill upon the shore, And in the shady eddy fished, Beaeath the glant sycamore. "The day was fair as ever suilled-"The river sparkled languidity,

"And then, as in a wandering dream, Arose between mound that shore Strauge, sunny talands in the stream I neversaw them there before, Your mother sat in shady nook, and, with eyes downcast on a book, Kept reading some old poet's rhym

The Herring Torture in Russia.

M. Emille Andreoli, who took part in the Polish insurrection, and on his capture by the Russiane was sentenced to twelve years' imprisonment in Siberia, has just published in the Rusua Moderne the dirst part of his prison recollections, in which he describes what he calls herring torture, practiced by the Russian police. He says:

"I knew several who underwent the latter, and they told me that nothing could compare with the sufferings they endured. They were confiaed in a well-warmed apartment, salted herrings with broad and water for the first few daysbeing their only food. If they refused to answer the questions of the examining commissioners the broad was first of all withdrawn, and then the water, whereupon the torture of intense thirst commenced, depriving the sufferer of all moral strength, and even making him abanden the resolution which he had formed to die.
